As the Coronavirus pandemic has changed so much in our communities throughout the Snoqualmie Valley, access to human services remains more important than ever. The Supportive Community For All Work Group spent the past year grappling with this mission in “normal” times, and their work will be foundational in moving forward in responding to this new environment.

SCFA met virtually with 28 members of the Work Group, Partner Team and community leaders on April 20 for the final Work Group gathering. King County Councilmember Kathy Lambert joined the Work Group and shared her praise for the work that centers on improving access to human services in the Snoqualmie Valley. King County Communities of Opportunity Program Manager José Camacho Martinez shared the county’s commitment to fund the implementation of the core strategies identified by the SCFA Work Group.

During the past year, the Work Group met 13 times to utilize the findings of SCFA’s landmark Community Needs Assessment and the expertise of community users and providers of human services in the Valley to make human services easily accessible. The SCFA thanks the Work Group members for this astounding engagement and community work and is honored to continue to implement this work in the Snoqualmie Valley. Thank you Suzy Berger, project coordinator, for your leadership during phase 1 of the project.
Once again, our local communities have been struck by the tragedy of student overdose. The most productive method we have at our disposal to reduce youth substance use is prevention. The work to increase protective factors, decrease risk factors and engage environmental strategies of change. Community level change involves us all, we all have a part to play!

Let’s come together! Let’s end the tragedies!

Sponsored by Influence the Choice in partnership with the Snoqualmie Valley Community Network

Although discussion regarding overdose is a sensitive topic it is vital. The majority of this workshop involves strategies of change and is appropriate for middle and high school students, parents, educators and the community.

Thank you to those that have donated to keep our Weekend Power Pack program going!

The Snoqualmie Valley Community Network is working with Riverview School District to continue distribution of Weekend Power Packs during the time when school is cancelled due to COVID-19. Packs will be distributed on Fridays to students who pick up lunch at Carnation Elementary School, Stillwater Elementary School, or Cherry Valley Elementary School. We continue to pack over 200 packs per week and your donations have helped us purchase this food! We have raised almost $5000 to date. What an amazing supportive community we have.
