our last Mentor Roundtable was about what Mentoring Matches Do Together. Many of you shared amazing activities that you do together. We wanted mentors to remember it can put a mentee in a place of vulnerability to confess the absence of a skill. So, if your mentee reveals a skill they do not posses and invites you to teach them, accept that invitation enthusiastically. Continue to encourage your mentee in the area that they are learning and you may notice a change in the student. They may smile more, open up more or in others ways. You can create a sense of trust between the two of you. You can also model vulnerability by modeling a skill that you don’t posses and invite your mentee to teach you. If you are looking for ideas for activities you can do together check out the recording of the Mentor Roundtable or the handout. See the links below.
